of facts are based on previous knowledge, which, in turn, is expanded by the advances. Then resolution of research problems often gives rise to further problems which need resolving. In addition, research often: â€¢ divides the principal question or problem into more practicable sub- questions or problems.

RESEARCH AND THE RESEARCH PROBLEM 1

Formulating Research Problems. R. esearch problems are questions that indicate gaps in the scope or the certainty of our knowledge. They point either to problematic phenomena, observed events that are puzzling in terms of our currently accepted ideas, or to problematic theories, current ideas that are chal- lenged by new hypotheses.
